Success removing website images

In the sometimes murky world of internet images, the law is not entirely toothless. Bevans were recently instructed to remove images taken from one website and placed upon a rival site – a misappropriation made with the intention of gaining advantage in a highly competitive market.

After the client experienced six weeks of delay, obstruction and pure brush off, Bevans scored an instant success with proceedings drawn up by in house advocates from our intellectual property team destined for the local County Court. This led to the immediate removal of the offending images from the rival website.

The success comes on the back of previous successes in regaining control of websites and ongoing involvement in disputes and injunctive relief in relation to misuse of domain names. Bevans believe that their past experience with many forms of injunctions and their growing expertise in information technology and intellectual property law provide clients with a service not commonly found outside the big London firms and London Counsel.
